LEADERSHIP: The Key to the Professionalization of Nursing

Linda Ann Bernhard, R.N., M.S.
Michelle Walsh, R.N., M.S.

Intended primarily for nursing students, this is a comprehensive yet basic text about the leadership process. It provides a thorough grounding in theories of leadership for future nurse-leaders while emphasizing practical examples applied to existing nursing delivery systems. It presents a wide range of models and examples related directly to current nursing practice. Students will understand the practicality of the discussions, as leadership ability can be learned and the authors encourage students to develop that ability. This will help them feel and be more professional. The book relates the nursing process to the teaching-learning process and the leadership process. Students familiar with the nursing process will more readily understand the new concepts. Conflict management is discussed and differentiated from conflict resolution. Students are offered specific strategies for dealing with the types of conflicts encountered by the nurse-leader.

- Six decision-making models are introduced and related to nursing
- The evaluation process chapter includes descriptions of the nursing audit, peer review, and other tools specifically related to nursing practice

HEALTH POLICY AND NURSING PRACTICE

Linda Aiken, R.N., Ph.D.

In this text the author has coordinated and edited contributions from the foremost nursing leaders and educators in the country which were presented at the Scientific Session of the American Academy of Nursing. The book discusses the major health policy issues within the nursing discipline and brings to light the nurses' influence in a rapidly changing health system. Chapter 1 identifies the major health policy issues affecting nursing and establishes the framework within which major leaders in nursing analyze national health initiatives from a health policy perspective. The text then presents the most comprehensive collection of databased evaluations of outcomes of nursing care in various settings. It includes:

- How to evaluate the effectiveness of nurse midwives
- How institutions can reunite nursing service and nursing education
- How to develop a professional nurse practice

RESEARCH METHODS FOR NURSES

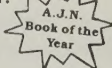

Winona B. Ackerman, R.N., Ph.D.
Paul R. Lohnes, Ed.D.

Intended for the baccalaureate and graduate introductory research course for nurses, this text emphasizes a practical, process approach without neglecting philosophical issues. The text teaches a new system of casual modeling. The required data analysis are facilitated by an all-purpose FORTRAN computer program which is provided. This text offers an alternative to traditional nursing research. The authors discuss theory, models, and causation early, and move steadily toward the goal of building strong theory throughout the text. Each of the theoretical chapters is immediately followed by a chapter on practical application. The text presents numerous nursing examples that relate nursing research to the large context of scientific research (e.g. medical, biological, physical, social, and psychological).

ACTION IN AFFIRMATION: Toward an Unambiguous Profession of Nursing

Jerome P. Lysaught, Ed.D.

This text traces the progress of proposals designed to make American nursing a fully professional partner in the enhancement of health care. In particular, it examines the effects of twenty-one specific recommendations advanced by the National Commission for the Study of Nursing and Nursing Education in 1970. Following the National Commission's first report, An Abstract for Action (published by McGraw-Hill), Action in Affirmation reports on efforts over the past ten years to define what has been an ambiguous profession—nursing. The chapters and sections parallel the earlier An Abstract for Action and thus provide both an historic and professional analysis of progress, continuing needs, and an agenda for action. A general overview of the current professional "state" of nursing in America is provided, and the concerns of nurse administrators, educators, and organizational leaders are addressed.
